Description

Overview

The CNC Dead Centre Stub is a precision-engineered machine tool accessory designed to support workpieces during CNC turning and machining operations. Its short-point configuration is suitable for compatible setups where a compact centre profile is required for workpiece support and positioning.

Common Uses

The CNC Dead Centre Stub is commonly used in compatible CNC lathes to support shafts and cylindrical workpieces during turning operations. Its compact stub-point design is suitable for machining setups where a shorter centre profile is required. It is used in engineering workshops, tool rooms, and industrial manufacturing facilities. The correct mounting interface, centre geometry, speed rating, and workpiece requirements should be verified before use to ensure safe and reliable machining performance.
