Description

Overview

The Coupling Nut is a long, internally threaded fastening component designed to join two threaded studs, rods, or bolts together and extend the overall threaded length. Its extended body provides secure thread engagement and reliable connection in workholding, machine assembly, fabrication, and general engineering applications.

Common Uses

The Banka Coupling Nut is widely used for joining and extending threaded studs, rods, and bolts in strap clamp assemblies, mould clamps, fixtures, machine-table workholding systems, machine assembly, and fabrication operations. It is an essential fastening component for CNC machining centers, milling machines, drilling machines, tool rooms, mould and die workshops, fabrication units, and precision engineering facilities, where secure threaded connections, extended reach, flexible workholding, and reliable fastening performance are essential.
