Features

- Manufactured from carbon steel.
- Designed for standard metric thread cutting.

- Suitable for creating internal threads.
- Designed for manual threading operations.
- Compatible with suitable tap wrenches.
- Thread profiles designed for metric standards.
- Suitable for general workshop applications.
- Helps produce consistent internal threads.
- Available in different metric sizes.
- Suitable for maintenance and repair work.

Description

Overview

The Totem Metric Standard Thread Carbon Steel Hand Tap is a threading tool designed to cut internal metric threads in pre-drilled holes. Manufactured from carbon steel, it is suitable for general threading, maintenance, repair, and workshop applications.

Common Uses

The Totem Metric Standard Thread Carbon Steel Hand Tap is commonly used in engineering workshops, tool rooms, fabrication units, and maintenance departments to cut internal metric threads in pre-drilled holes. It is useful for preparing threaded holes for bolts, screws, and other fasteners in compatible metal components. These taps are suitable for general manufacturing, assembly, repair, and maintenance operations. The correct tap size, thread pitch, and drilling diameter should be selected according to the required metric thread specification.
